If ever there was a fore-ordained bache-lor that man was Major Teller. Some men are born to old bachelurhood—others have are born to old bachclorhood—others have old hachclorhood thrust upon them; and to the former class belonged our Major. You could have picked him out in a multitude; if he had been labeled, like an antedituyian fessel, or a dided specimen of entomology, there couldn't have been more certainty in the matter.

there couldn't have been more certainty in the matter.

He was a dapper, thin little man, something under five feet in height, with a Lossy black wig, closely trimmed side whiskers, and costome so daintly neat that he reminded you of a shinning black cat? He took a Turkish bath in the morning, and a Russian bath in the evening; he came home to dinner at twelve precisely, and went to feel at cleven at night, with bits books as the head, and his wig clevated on the gas-fixtures, and every chair in the room standing at tight angles with the wal!

It was hight noon on a sparkling, windy March day when Major Teller came home to the antique, down-town boarding house where he had vegetated for the last twenty years, and went to his own room to brush his wig for the mid-day meal. Opening the door, he stumbled over an obstacle in the way:

Oh, they your person. Personal tests the set

On, I beg your pardon, I'm sure," said the Major, turning very red, and recovering bis foot with difficulty. It was Miss Patience Petilgrew, on her hands and knees cleaning off the oil-cloth at the door!

It was mis Patience Petitigrew, on her hands and knees cleaning off the oil-cloth it the door!

Now the Major was afraid of Patience—draid of her as the plurab famb fears the grant wolf, or the undfending robin the dire scrpent. Miss Patience was tall and lean and sallow, but she curled her halr, and wore an artificial rose over her left ear, and sang little whistling times to a little spindle legged plano, and firmly Edieved that if she only waited a little longer she should get married to somebody! And because the Major sat opposite her at the table—Miss Patience helped her widowed sister "keep house," and served out the gravy and sanges—and regarded her artificial rose and bear's preasy curt with a sort of fearful fascination, Miss Patience somehow opined that she should one day, Cupid Willing, become Mrs. Major Teller!

"It's of no consequence, Major," said Miss Patience, with a prementation of the carpet. "I hope your fire isn't out!" "Thank you, main; it is very good." "I do wooder, Major," said Miss Patience, with a prementation of the carpet. "I hope your fire isn't out!" "Thank you, main; if is very good." "I do wooder, Major," said Miss Patience, with a prementation of the carpet. "I hope your fire isn't out!" "Thank you, main; if its very good." "Hope you fire son't out!" "The Major retired precipitately behind the coal-scottle, and made no reply. "You'd be so much more comfortable, you know," added Miss Patience, wringing out her woolen cloth, and looking so lovingly on the Major that he retreated still further into his wandrobe, where among the swinging efficies of coats and trowsers, he felt comparatively safe.

further into his wardrobe, where among the swinging efligies of coats and trowsers, he felt comparatively safe.

Miss Patience in situated a moment, and in that moment the Major felt all the unifeipatory agonies of being pursued, captured, brought forth, and possibly married before he could get breath to remonstrate! But she finally took up her pail and ramished.

"Dear me, that was a very narrow escape," thought our hero, emerging from his saucturary. "Some day she'll be too much for me. Perliaps I'd better change my boarding place. Vest-that will be the only sufety. I suppose! couldn't have her sworn over in keep the peace, and, really, there's no saying what a determined wom in of fifty might not do. I'll look out for a new place to morrow."

"Dear me, Majer, you have no appetite," said Miss Patheuce, sweetly, at the dinner table.

"No, ma'out," said the Malor.

"No, ma'am," said the Major,
"Try to cat a little—just to please me,

"Try to eat a little—just to please me, Major."
"No, I thank you, ma'am d"
"Pon't you know, Major, people will say you are in love, it you don't eat more?" smitted the antiquated spinster.
This was more than our hero could endore; he rose up and left Miss Pettigrew triumphant victor of the wordy field.
"I won't go back to that houte if I can help it," thought Major Teller, brushing the cold dow away from his forchead with a crimson silk pocket handkerfeld." Her intentions are serious; I know they are."

Pelligrew must be obtained on some terms or other.

As Major Teller was frantically revolving these things in his mind, he came to a sudden and involuntary standstill. There was a crowd guthered in the street—a fallen omnibus boxe, or an arrested plekpocket, or some other nucleus, round which gathers the rapidly increasing swarm of metapolitan loafers. Now of all things Major Teller most dreaded a crowd, and be looked round nervously for some means of cerape.

And the Major in his innermost mind reviewed the entechism and hymra he had learned as a child, trying to think if there was not some invocation particularly suited to an elderly gentleman in great peril and perplexity. But he could not remember anything appropriate to his particular case. "It's twenty years since I've been in the inside of a church," thought the pentient old offender. "I wish I bad gone a little more regularly. I wonder if it's too late in life to reform I" round nervously for some means of escape. An old-fashioned church, with open dox as and some sort of service going on insite, caught the Major's eye. He made an instantaneous dart for its lung Guthic paralla, shielded by tiner does of green baize.

"It's a good chance to think up something solemn and appropriate, and that so to thing, until the crowd gets by," he thought, settling himself in the corner of ore of the softly-contined pews to listen to the mild, droning voice of the old clengman. The church was very warn, and the light softened by purple and golden and crimson grass, was dim, and the elegyman's role rather moment nous, and Major Teller we a unconsciously theoming rather drows; when a plump old ludy came in, and the sexton beckened him from his real.

But the sermon was over and people were streaming down the aisle, and the Major felt that he didn't care to prolong the thing and that he had done a very landable act in consign to church, and—

Even while these ideas were passing indistincily through his brain, ho was borne towards the attar in an upwand eddy of the crowd, and felt a gaunt arm thrust through his.

HEWPORT DAILY NEWS.

GUANEW CARINERS DEL From the rumors plenteously scattered by the "Washington correspondents, it seems prelly cert in that President Johnson intends to remodel his cabinet. He is said to he fixed in this determination by the result of the elections, tast week. That is, because the democratic candidate for a publican candidate for Governor in Onto is elected by a reduced majority, the policy of the national administration is to be changed and to proceed on a new basis. The latest mornight which is now fixed for this reconstruction of the cabinet is at the close of the New York election, when Mr. Johnson protochly expects a conal commissioner to be elected who is friendly to his administration, and whose election will give him "assmance doubly sure" that the people have come round to litskide. In all these cabinet rumors, we hear no candidates named for the new places except democrats. For the place which gives tone and direction to the administration-the department of State-Homilo Seymon is prominently spoken of. Mr. Seymour is the person who, as Governor of New York, took a position of decided hostility to the wat, used every endeavor to discourage enlistments for the nimy, whose "friends"so he called them-got up and carried through the republic draft riots in New York city in 1862, and whose record is such that his appointment to a place in the cabinet can be nothing less than a direct insult to every American citizen who has stood loyal to the Government during the rebellion.

Mr. Stanton.

The views given below are those of a democratic writer, who books at things from his own stand-point, professing to "know" whereof he all ms: The curious reader may ask "What disposition is to be made of Mr. War U I shawer - "Nothing." Should Senntor Sherman and others contradict their record of last session, and oppose Mr. Stanton's removal, I leave that the President will continue him suspended, not under the provisions of the Civil Office Tenure Bill, but under the tinquestioned and unquestionable general power of the Executive to suspend the functions of any of his subordinate officers, it will also be recolleded that the President is not required to send to the Senate the maninations of his new Cabinet until the close of the session, even though they he not confirmed.' It will thus appear to be in the President's power not only to let Mr. Stanton "slide" but also to install his new Calmust and retain them during the next session of Congress regardless of Senatorial confirmation. Should the verdict and condemantion just pronounced by the people against Radication not check the revolutionwy policy of Congress, then it will remain for President Johnson to use all legal and constitutional means within his power to proteet himself and his executive perogatives against further legislative usurpation This, I confidently predict, he is determined to dojeand I have no doubt a new Cable! will be in complete working order at least

The Post, speaking of the Democratic safecess in the recent elections, says: "This time! So taken for the same cort of popularakening that made the year 1981 memorable."

That's good ! The awakening of 1861 was a crushing bloss to mra like Franklin Pierce, while this revives them again; before that, the majority of Democratic masses cowered, changed their tone, and, in some cases, dropped their politics and became neutral, while over this, they are all as hap py now as they were miserable then and that an akening, also, sent terror to Richmond and to the hearts of conspiring Southern Democrats, while this is a cause of Joli fication to all the "remnants of the rebellion." In Pensylvania the election of Sharswood, the Democratic candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court in Pennsylvania is conceded. His majority will be very small.

CAMINET CHANGES .- The press of the country is now teeming with telegrams from Washington, predicting changes in the President's Cabinet, based upon the results of the late elections. That these changes will surely take place there is no doubt, and the change will be thorough and complete-not however, in consequence of the great triumph of the National Democracy, but in accordance with a previous determination of President Johnson to reorganize his admin-Istration on a strictly Democratic basis.

This fact has been more than once hinted at in my telegraphic correspondence, and since the late political revolution, which has astonished alike both parties, has made it plain that the Radical Congress stands condenned before the country, I feel authorized to allude more plainly to the contemplated movements of the President, and to venture the announcement that there will be an enfire change of the Cabinet immediately after the New York election. It is understood that there are several members of the presen! Cabile who would be retained if consistent with the new programme, as Mr. Edwin M. PRESERVING DAHMA ROOM.—The tops being killed by the autumn froats, and thus become unsightly, must be cut away, leaving the roots undisturbed for eyeral weeks in order to feed the maseent abads deslined to break the following spring. The next business is to lift the plant from the ground; and in doing this, the greatest care should be taken to preserve their fibrous roots, for the plant requires being killed by the autumn frosts, and thus their fibrous roots, for the plant requires constant nourishment. A number of these rootlets will however, under the most care-ful handling; be broken off and the supply of ear interrupted until new roots are made; but with those plants that have well-swollen buds their reproduction is soon effected.— When the tubers are raised from the ground, they should immediately be transferred to their winter quarters, where their fibrous roots must be carefully spread upon a thin have of sand or earth, and at once covered with about an inch of the same, leaving the greater portion of the tuber bare. During winter they should be kept slightly moistened.
